Managers Short Report

January was a quiet but difficult month. Most stock holdings flat or lower, no real direction. Low volatility. Indexes held up by a few positive heavyweights.

We remain 87% invested, but with partial protection on the majority of holdings through purchased puts or sold calls. My intention is to add to positions in BASF, Aedeficia, Evonik and SBM Offshore if they decline.

On the Eurobond side, investors are hoping for rate cuts this year. Even though the index dropped over 1% in January, it seems an all time record volume was reached.

Lets hope bond investors are correct and we see both markets rise.

Managers Short Report

For the last 100 years, February on average is the 2nd worst performing month, only September is the "Winner"

They say past performance is no indicator for the future...how right they were. It was certainly not a bad month. 4th quarter earnings were good and many still expect future rate cuts from Fed and ECB. Health related stocks were in favour. Chipmakers moved up and down like a ping pong ball.

French and German stocks broadly underperformed against other mature European markets. France lowered GDP forecast due to Gaza and Ukraine. Weak external demand appears to have tipped Germany into near recession. But despite this, the fund has many holdings in Frankfurt. Corporations tend to be efficient, fiscally responsible and boards are intelligent. Unlike the unintelligent "Greens" who lobbied for a complete immediate halt to the nuclear energy program, forcing German industry to pay high energy prices from alternative (and more environmentally polluting) sources. And that for a manufacturing country "pur sang" Talk about shooting yourself in the foot.

Eurobonds were lower this month. But it's presumably only a question of time before the Fed, followed by the ECB, lower the rates.

The fund has protective puts under many holdings. I find the puts are a cheaper method at the moment than writing inexpensive call options, particularly short dated At or slightly Out the money series. This indicates to me that investors expect firstly a dip to come rather than prices extending their upward runs. This fits in with my opinion that a dip may be coming soon. If and when that occurs, I shall again become fully invested, with the proviso that partial protection is there at all times.

Managers Short Report

Facts vs Predictions

The facts were quite simple last month.

The Eurostoxx 50 index touched record highs a few times, before slightly receding. Helped by chip manufacturers and optimistic investors.

Our bond benchmark rose 1% after suffering losses the previous 2 months. Future rate cuts are expected and almost certainly will happen.

My prediction is the stock market will decline, either from geopolitical reasons or nervousness /profit taking due to high valuations. Apart from some newly purchased holdings, all positions have either puts under or calls written against. The majority of calls are April and May expiries, the puts are long term. Newsletter story

Fortunately, we remained fully invested last month, but unfortunately sold calls against many positions, so haven't enjoyed the full recent runups. Written calls limit upside potential in return for partial protection. In February, I tipped BASF and SBM Offshore. Since then, both are around 25% higher. We will only make around 10%.

As mentioned, the general consensus is that the Fed will cut rates in June (expect 0.25%) but recent PPI was higher than expected and this will cast doubts on the timing and extent of future rate cuts. The 0,25% is already discounted in the pricing.

So, taking everything into account, and keeping in line with my motto,
"Better to miss an opportunity than make an actual loss"

I will not be rolling up the options and shall remain well protected with the puts. Only when I become more optimistic shall the fund lighten up on protection and be more aggressive on chasing profits.

Keep well everyone and until next month,

Gary

Managers Short Report

Bonds were down 1.40% The stock index down 2.5% A difficult month.

But a lucky one for our fund. We have many puts long and calls short, so the stock losses were partially compensated by the options profits. And a few of our stock holdings went against the general downward trend and improved. The fund made 3% overall, whilst the benchmark was down 1.9%.

Sometimes there's no corresponding directional movements of a portfolio vs benchmark.

Keep well everyone and until next month,

Again, we were lucky.

We made 3% with the benchmark only making a fraction over 0.5%.

Like last month, some stocks were winners and the declining stocks had option protection. But be aware, performance figures are a moment valuation and can (and usually do) vary in strange ways.

Keep well everyone and until next month,

Gary

Bonds held steady, stock market dropped.

We underperformed the benchmark. Some holdings dropped more than average, Stellantis was a large loss.

A few put series did not react due to little trade. This lack of trading occasionally happens with long dated series. We have many as they are good value on a daily basis vs short dated.

But they aren't always good for reporting purposes on days the stocks decline. You can compare this to an elastic band. You stretch and stretch and suddenly it moves Bonds up over 1% Stocks up nearly 1%. We again underperformed. No excuses usually, but this time a valid one.

On last trading day of the month, stocks dropped and we went from a positive 0.50% performance the day before to a loss of 1.75%. The portfolios stocks of course reacted immediately, but some options didn't trade.

So calls had unchanged time value and puts didn't move up. The next trading day, options reacted and we opened up nearly 1.5% higher. Shame we are legally forced to report on closing day of month and not 1st trading day !!!!!
